

Was the Trump Arraignment Rally REALLY a Success?

As I previously mentioned, I spent many years refereeing amateur ice hockey. I was in the stands watching a high school game, standing between two moms of different teams. Listening to them yell at the ref, I realized that they were not watching the same game I was.

What does this have to do with politics? When you are invested financially or emotionally you are not seeing the game the way it is actually being played. You are seeing it the way you want it to be played. .

For almost all political activists, they do not have the ability to make political decisions dispassionately. They are all in for their favorite team, which can do no wrong.

I keep waiting for Trump to show us a different playbook. Getting his supporters to Miami for the arraignment, then buying food in a café while they sing him happy birthday, makes for very nice television. He raised $8 million which is impressive. And he blew a golden opportunity.

What if he told his supporters to stay away from the courthouse? Then he said he would be making a major announcement after the arraignment. 400 million eyes would be glued to the TV, figuring he could drop out of the race or make a deal to plead guilty.

And in this press conference he says: "I will not comment on my case, the lawyers will argue that in a courtroom, but I'm going to go through the incriminating evidence against Joe Biden taking millions of dollars as the head of a crime family. He would layout: recordings, video, graphs, charts and documents making an overwhelming case.

That would make a real difference in the 2024 election, not Café Versailles.

"Republicans want election integrity." "Democrats want to win elections."

No wonder why we lose?

The E. Jean Carroll defamation trial, where Trump already has a $5 million judgment against him, will have a second jury trial starting January 2024.

Please tell me how many soccer moms will decide to support Trump as result of these sexual assault allegations?

I am constantly hearing that Ron DeSantis needs to serve the residents of Florida by remaining governor until his term expires.

Here's a question: If the metrics shows that Trump as nominee will cause the Republican Party in Florida to lose their supermajority in the legislature as well as lose city, county and school board races, doesn't Gov. DeSantis have an obligation to the People of Florida to enter the race to win as many Republican seats statewide as possible?

The difference on downline ballots between Trump at the top the ticket in 2020 and DeSantis in 2022 was HUGE.

In response to my column last week, a number of readers sent me links to the Presidential Records Act. I am aware of it, and it could very well be a valid defense. However, not one legal expert expects the judge to toss out all 37 counts on dismissal motions. That means there will be a time consuming, ugly and quite boring trial.

Because the case will be tried in either Miami or Palm Beach County which unlike DC or New York would be an approximately 40% Trump supporting jury, the odds are, there will be hung jury, and we will get to do it over and over. This is surely a winning path to 270.

Have you heard that California is passing AB957, forcing parents to give gender affirming care to their children or risk the children being taken away? The next step will be a law requiring jail.

90% of America is against this, but since our side is: "All Trump - All the Time" you are not hearing a word about this legislation. If we talk "TRANS" we can win 75% of all races.

I started asking Republican women (non-activist) who have been following RFK Jr. : "If the election was between Donald Trump and RFK, who would they vote for?"

Please do your own survey. The results will shock you.
